One Size Doesn't Fit All: the Pedagogy of Online Delivery of Education and

Ros Brennan
Charles Sturt University

The Online delivery and support of education and training is attracting increasing interest as the technology becomes more popular and accessible. In our enthusiasm for the new technologies discussions of pedagogy have taken a back seat. This paper explores some of the issues associated online pedagogy including the nature of the new educational contexts, the educational control over what is being learnt and by whom and how teaching and learning are taking place. It presents some new conceptualisations of Online pedagogy that can be applied to changes that are often being driven hard and fast by forces quite outside education and training.