The role of EdNA Online in providing resources for the educational community

Kerrie Smith
EdNA Online

This session will concentrate on what EdNA Online can offer to the educational community, fulfilling its mission to facilitate online communities and collaborative networks. Kerrie will focus in particular on EdNA's suite of online services for teachers, students, parents and life-long learners: e.g. the online database of evaluated resources, tools for browsing and searching, noticeboards and forums, email alert services and the EdNA webdesk. The EdNA database contains records about curriculum support resources, journals and publications, online projects, leading practice schools, professional development for teachers and administrators, educational organisations, professional associations and much more. EdNA Online focuses on Australian curriculum, actively seeks Australian content and makes its tools freely available to all involved in Australian education and training. It actively promotes citizenship of the Australian online educational community.
